1. [] the Chinese Communist Party Committee for Kwangsi held a conference to discuss the role of the Party in increasing agricultural production in Kwangsi. The conference was attended by over 40 persons including the secretaries of local party committees from Nanning, Kueilin, Liuchou and Wuchou as well as by party secretaries from principal hsien throughout the province. 25X1
2. CH'EN Man-yuan, deputy secretary of the Committee and conference chairman, outlined the mission of the various party committees in increasing production as follows:
 - a. Cadre personnel must be taught that long service in the villages is the basic work of the Party. Agriculture now occupies a position of great importance in the national economy; commodity prices can be stabilized and famine alleviated only by increasing the production of foodstuffs. The country can buy raw materials and machinery for industry only by producing a large quantity of marketable and exportable foodstuffs. Increased agricultural production is also necessary to create markets for industrial goods; to stimulate the development of new industries; and to increase the purchasing power of the peasants. Consequently, the erroneous ideas of cadre personnel regarding service in the villages must be corrected. Those who do not want to do village work must be subjected to criticism and other forms of discipline; those willing to work in the villages must be commended.
 - b. Responsible committee members must go into the villages and exercise leadership in the production movement. Cadre personnel in areas where land reform has been completed should devote themselves entirely to the movement, and party research organizations should begin studies of agricultural production to the exclusion of all other research activities.

- c. To launch a mass movement among the peasants aimed toward increased production, these policies must be emphasized:
- (1) Increased agricultural taxes will not be levied on increased production.
 - (2) Application for readjustment of land valuation may be made where land valuation is too high.
 - (3) Personal savings, accrued by individuals through austerity, may be retained by those persons; after land reform has been completed, all individual earnings through production or overproduction may also be retained.
 - (4) Peasants who lease government land, private land, or land of undetermined ownership for cultivation will pay the principal rent plus a levy on earnings calculated on the basis of each individual and each family. No other levies will be charged.
- d. As means of assistance to the production movement, the following measures should be instituted:
- (1) Development of mutual assistance organizations to alleviate the shortage of draft animals, farm implements and fertilizer.
 - (2) Assistance in drought prevention, in the reconditioning of irrigation works, and in the distribution of selected seeds provided by higher Chinese Communist agricultural authorities.
 - (3) Granting of timely farm loans and purchase of farm products.
